Event Topic:

Regulators Move to Individual Responsibility for Internal Governance What's at Stake?

Financial regulators have reached the conclusion that corporate fines for specific regulatory breaches are not enough to change the behaviors of regulated firms. As a result, they have shifted their focus to two specific things: Individual Accountability and Executive Governance

In order to stay out of trouble in this environment, Senior Management and Directors at firms need to do two things:

- Be clear on those areas of the business for which they have accountability and responsibility
- Have excellent oversight of those areas and provide evidence of that oversight

Find out how risk and compliance executives can help their senior executives achieve their goals leveraging the power of RSA Archer and Governor Software!
